ROOSEVELT PLOT ON GOV. HASKELL

(As Told by Senator Beveridge)

Senator Beveridge joins ex-Governor Larabee in adding to the growing Roosevelt din. "Mr. Roosevelt is a man of more than ordinary ken," says Beveridge, in a letter to a friend at New York. "He is a seer—his powers of lifting the veil of the future are almostanny. When McKinley was assassinated, Roosevelt was looking for it. He was sixty miles in the woods, cut off from all communication. When he was assistant secretary of the navy he made preparation to lead a troop to Cuba three months before congress voted an appropriation. When he charged El Caney he wore a chain shirt against his flesh. He knew Taft's administration would see hard lines—would be a failure. He fought with himself six days to put off immediate presidential succession. He disliked to yield up his power. When he decided he looked for the man whom he could succeed. The man was Taft. Then Roosevelt buried himself in Africa. Roosevelt fears more for election than nomination. Returning to America the presidential nomination will be tendered him on a platter, so to speak. But knowing that Bryan is done for, the ex-president's fears have always been encompassed in the rise of a western democrat. One who, in part, has been molded partly to the Bryan ideas. While Bryan, as a candidate, is dead, there is no mistaking the fact that the masses of people are in rapport with his preachments—even if many of them have not voted for him. Wherefore the undue activity of the ex-president in the last national campaign. Mr. Roosevelt is a bluffer. He is likewise lucky. Whom he hits he pains. Witness his Annapolis club follies, nature-laker stunts, et cetera. In his western man fear, Roosevelt for two years has had three men in his eye—three governors—Johnston of Minnesota, Haskell of Oklahoma and Harrison of Ohio. In the last campaign Roosevelt hit at these three men. In Johnston's case he has no fear. Death, like in his succession to the throne, helped him there. Johnson is dead. Harrison is not on the offensive. Roosevelt rapped at Haskell, the chief demonstrator of Bryan's ideas in a new state, Haskell, redoubtable and plucky, rapped back. Haskell's sudden leap into the limelight at Denver frightened Roosevelt. "That man Haskell is hell," said Roosevelt to Joe Medill, Jr., of Chicago. "He's a corner. We must spike his guns!" Haskell flew into Roosevelt with a hot letter. He called Roosevelt a four-flusher, for failed. That maddened Roosevelt. He was stung, not once, but forty times in as many places. "That Haskell man is a dinger, who knows my weaknesses," thought the Rough Rider. And then the cry went out: "Get that man Haskell of Oklahoma. Paralyze him. Hunt the dope!" The cry reverberated throughout all departments. The departments of justice and of interior affairs got busy. Hearst then appeared on the scene. Roosevelt leagued with him. Haskell's record was searched for flaws. "Haskell must be killed politically. He comes from a dangerous state," said the then president. Spies flooded Muskogee. One day a code wire was flashed from Muskogee, Okla., direct to the white house that Haskell was at the head of a contracting party that dealt in realty. Two days later the old worn-out dummy-listing scheme, in which every lot owner in Muskogee was interested, was given to the president, who then wrote a letter to Associated Press blasting Haskell. The fight has never let up. Roosevelt returns to America as a candidate. With such fellows as Haskell out of the way, he will have no democratic opposition save the Clark faction. Yes, Roosevelt is a seer, and lucky. But suppose Haskell comes clear, shows up the gigantic Hearst-Roosevelt conspiracy to ruin him with the aid of governmental machinery and a department appropriation of $200,000 set aside at Roosevelt's request—to get him—what then?"
